Virtual Colonoscopy is a new developing technique providing an alternative method of screening for colorectal cancer and precursor lesions (polyps). Since this is a new technology, few radiologists, gastroenterologists, and technologists have experience in understanding, performing, or interpreting these studies. This two-day minicourse is intended to provide a means to educate radiologists, gastroenterologists, and technologists in the current state of the art in virtual colonography.

This two-day structured minicourse includes:

• Didactic lectures
• Demonstrations and tutorials on state-of-the-art workstations
• Review of cases from our pathology-proven database

COURSE OBJECTIVES
At the conclusion of this fellowship, participants will be able to:

• Describe the current state of the art of virtual colonoscopy
• Discuss the issues related to colorectal cancer screening and the impact of this new modality
• Acquire skills needed to perform and interpret virtual colonoscopy
• Identify the advantages and disadvantages of the current available workstations, virtual colonoscopy software and preparation kits
